Guinea-Bissau–India relations Guinea-Bissau–India relations refers to the current and historical relationship of Guinea-Bissau with India. India was first contacted by the Portuguese missionaries in the early 16th century. Since then the two nations have established formal diplomatic relations in May 1966. India is a major foreign investor in the West African nation and has maintained a small diplomatic mission in Bissau since the 19th century. History The Portuguese missionaries have been present in the Bijagós since the early 16th century. During the 17th century, the relations between the Portuguese Empire and the Bijagós were very cordial, and strong trade ties were built up. However, during the late 19th century, the Portuguese were ousted from the region by the French. On 29 May 1966, Guinea-Bissau established diplomatic ties with the Indian Union. The relations were formalized with the establishment of the Embassy of India in Bissau. From the very beginning, India followed a policy of non-alignment, and Guinea-Bissau remained neutral during the Portuguese Colonial War (1961-1974). Bissau was under Portuguese rule until 1974, when it became part of the newly independent country of Guinea-Bissau. Prior to 1992, India maintained a diplomatic mission in Bissau. The Indian mission is headed by 77a5ca646e
