----- GNU General Public License (GPL) v3.0 Destiny 2 Beta Begins, Available To Pre-Owners Of The Game We may earn a commission for purchases made using our links. It's beta time! Destiny 2 has finally released its first beta test, and the community is jumping into the game to test out what they can do in a brand new game. Bungie has even opened the beta up to players who already own the game, and provided a beta key for those who don't already own a copy. Players are going to be able to get their hands on the beta soon, as it's already available to download from the PlayStation Store for users in Australia, Europe, and North America. Once players have downloaded the game, they can then jump in the Destiny 2 beta by downloading the Destiny 2 beta client from the PS Store. Players will also be able to jump right into the beta soon, as the beta will kick off the same day that the game is available in retail stores for people who purchase the Destiny 2 Season Pass, which costs $69.99. For those who don't purchase the Season Pass, the beta will be available to players at a later date. So what do you need to know about Destiny 2's beta? For starters, it's a standalone game, meaning that it's not connected to the base game or to Destiny 2's first season. It also offers a new Power Level cap of 115, which is an increase from the previous level cap of 80. It's available to download on both PlayStation 4 and PC, and you'll need a PS4 Pro to play on. In addition to the new Power Level cap, the beta offers a brand new Raid, Trials of the Nine, which is a solo activity. This is a unique activity because you have to make sure you kill every single enemy in the level without dying once. There's also a new weekly challenge which is also only available to players who own the game, and it's called the "Living Weapon" challenge. The game's new raid, Trials of
